Graphic designers create and maintain websites and other online properties. Book design: Many graphic designers are also involved in book design, although rarely at the initial conception stage. Newspaper design: If you see a newspaper ad or headline that you like, chances are that the graphic designer came up with the design. Brochure design: A graphic designer helps you convey a message through an attractive brochure. Advertisement design: As you may have guessed, a graphic designer is also involved in the creation of ads. Marketing materials: If you see something you like — a new restaurant, a new car, a new movie, or a new line of clothes — chances are a graphic designer put it together for the marketing department. Sometimes graphic designers create a logo that represents the company, or a client may request that a graphic designer create a logo for a new business. Very low frequency electrocortical activity in patients with cluster headache: clinical relevance. Very low frequency oscillations (VLFO) have been detected in the electroencephalogram (EEG) of headache patients. Although VLFO have been associated with pain states, they are also found in patients without acute headache pain. In this study, the relation between VLFO activity, acute headache pain, pain relief by pharmacological treatment, as well as the frequency and amplitude of VLFO activity, and the duration of cluster headache attacks, was assessed. Nine patients suffering from cluster headache attacks with documented VLFO activity were examined by means of EEG, whereupon the VLFO activity was analyzed according to the amplitude of the signal and the distribution of activity. The pain was quantified using the visual analog scale (VAS). For EEG analysis, the EEG signal was recorded from 19 electrodes. The results showed a close relationship between VLFO activity and headache pain. The VLFO activity in the frontal regions had a significant relation with acute pain and the VAS score, whereas the VLFO activity in the parietal regions was related to pain relief after treatment with carbamazepine. During remission, the VLFO amplitudes in the frontal regions were smaller than the values in the healthy control group. In the patient group, VLFO activity was not related to the duration of cluster headache attacks, and the distribution of VLFO activity was similar during headache attacks and remission.
