Project Summary/Abstract We propose to create and distribute a web-based, multilingual, interactive dashboard application that will provide clinicians, researchers, and policymakers with timely access to information about trends, policy, and advocacy issues relevant to HIV prevention, diagnosis, treatment, and care across all regions of the world. The project will make information about HIV rates and risk factors, treatment availability, and prevention and care services and interventions in each country available in near-real-time for a global audience. The dashboard will draw on a resource previously created by the UNDP's HIV-related indicators project that we will update with new data and expanded content. The initial dashboard will be in Russian, but in the future we will create a multilingual version. The dashboard will be available as an app on iPhone, Android, and iPad devices, as well as a web-based version for desktop use. While building the dashboard, we will collect user feedback to inform development. We will conduct a needs assessment among key stakeholders, the strategic partners, and the end-users. Based on this feedback we will create a prototype that will be iteratively refined through testing and user feedback with the strategic partners and the end-users. We will present the prototype in a number of user-centered design workshops with the strategic partners and the end-users. The prototype will be launched on a closed beta testing platform for a period of 1 year. Using the on-beta testing platform, the project team will assess the effectiveness of the dashboard in reaching end-users, its value as a user-engagement tool, and its utility in reaching different types of end-users. The users can access the dashboard through an easy to use phone app, desktop application or the web. The project team will produce a user manual (in multiple languages) to assist users in using the application. The dashboard will also include quick links to external resources, including data sources (e.g. UNDP) and indicators from the WHO

4.0 Good Good Okay Okay MEDIA: Trailer: Your introduction is a little weird, but I liked it. The gameplay looks interesting, from what I can gather it's basically a series of dungeon crawls and action battles. The interface isn't very intuitive, though, and it doesn't look like I can really add things to my profile or look up information on anything. > Good > Good > Okay > Okay > MEDIA: > Trailer: The interface is pretty simple. You can buy items, see what they do, and look up information on them. It looks like there are four unique classes, but I'm not sure how class-specific stats work. > Good > Good > Okay > Okay > MEDIA: > Trailer: It's pretty simple and the interface is intuitive. You're basically drawing a line of "power" to your position and enemies respond by attacking you. You can modify your attacks by pressing up and down to block, and pressing right and left to dodge. > Good > Good > Okay > Okay > MEDIA: > Trailer: You get XP and can level up by killing enemies or by doing special attacks. You can also go back and get stronger, but the process is a little mysterious. At the moment, it's unclear how much you gain when you kill someone. > Good > Good > Okay > Okay > MEDIA: > Trailer: You can go back and get stronger, but it's a little unclear how much. I just finished my first round of all 3 games and it was amazing. I spent like 2 years playing them. I absolutely loved them. Those games are amazing. My favorite Zelda game is the first one. First Zelda game had some of the best music I've ever listened to. 3D Zelda games are way better than 2D games. Skyward Sword is pretty damn good as well.
