The problem: I have the list of list of strings in a variable, each of them are of a type "string". I would like to have them printed out, with the content of each string. (somehow like the output of "unix sort" - with the lines separate by ",") The list looks something like this [{"Donald Duck"}, {"Gandalf"}, {"Santa Claus"}, {"Donald Duck"}, [...]] I tried the following: `import numpy as np` `st = []` for item in memberList: `st.append(item)` memberList =

`np.array(st) memberList.shape (1, 748) for member in memberList: print(member)`

However, this didn't gave me the correct output. A: Change `memberList = np.array(st)` to `memberList = np.array(st).tolist()` with that change, `memberList` becomes a list of lists rather than one list of 748 elements. the solution is to loop through the lists: `import numpy as np st = [['Donald Duck'], ['Gandalf'], ['Santa Claus'], ['Donald Duck'], ['...']] memberList = np.array(st) memberList.shape (1, 748) for item in memberList: print(item) A: Your code is pretty close to what you want. Instead of memberList = np.array(st) The following is all you need: memberList = np.array(st).tolist() The background description provided herein is for the purpose of generally presenting the context`
